Yihui Wang, Tenor

Based in London, Chinese tenor Yihui Wang possesses a highly versatile repertoire that spans the Italian Bel Canto tradition, late-romantic German works, and contemporary English opera. Supported by a full Royal Academy Opera Scholarship, he is currently completing his Advanced Opera Diploma at the Royal Academy of Music (RAM) under the tutelage of Catherine Wyn-Rogers. Prior to this, he received extensive training at the Royal Northern College of Music (RNCM), where he completed his Master of Music and Postgraduate Diploma in Musical Performance.

To date, Wang has performed in over eight operatic productions. His stage experience reflects a remarkable vocal flexibility, allowing him to navigate a broad and demanding repertoire. He has sung Bel Canto roles such as Dorvil in Rossini's La scala di seta, tackled contemporary works like Henry Crawford in Jonathan Dove's Mansfield Park, and performed core repertoire including Le Remendado in Bizet's Carmen in collaboration with Opera North.

Wang made his operatic debut in 2022 as Alfred in Johann Strauss's Die Fledermaus at the RNCM. Crucially, this production was conducted by the renowned David Parry. Recognizing Wang's vocal potential during this debut, Parry subsequently became his mentor. Working closely with Parry has helped clarify Wang's vocal identity as a Lyric Spinto tenor, guiding him toward roles that demand both lyric agility and a dramatic core. This objective assessment has paved the way for his current preparation of late-romantic German works, notably the role of Flamand in Richard Strauss's Capriccio, as well as romantic Italian repertoire like Edgardo in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor.

Equally at home on the concert platform, Wang maintains a highly active schedule, demonstrating the breadth of his artistry required for the international stage. His recent engagements include performances at the prestigious Buxton International Festival, a concert and CD recording project of Berlioz's Roméo et Juliette in Bergen, Norway, and a performance of Elgar's The Apostles at the Bridgewater Hall in Manchester.

Whether interpreting complex operatic roles or intimate concert repertoire, Wang is dedicated to the precise synthesis of text articulation and honest emotional delivery, bringing a rigorous classical foundation and profound musicality to every performance.
